To ensure that residential units or GFA were only counted once, the GFA or residential units for a given development were counted at the development's most recent application. For example, if a residential development went through a plan of subdivision and site plan approval, the residential units were counted at the time of site plan approval. However, if this residential development had received draft approval for plan of subdivision but hadn't gone through site plan approval yet, the residential units were counted at the time of subdivision approval.
